o Expected results : The guidelines presented in this session will help policy and decision makers achieve an objective, comprehensive mapping of the current public policy and institutional landscape that impacts the SSE, and map out future directions for its balanced and integrated development. The findings will be valuable to policy makers and their advisors at all levels—and at the subnational / local level in particular—tasked with the implementation of a social and solidarity economy or local sustainable development portfolio. They will also be of value to civil society and advocacy groups, practitioners and SSE actors aiming to ensure social justice and/or social and solidarity-based economic practices. And they will be useful to the research community in advancing their understanding of these issues.
